Come to rest, surrounded by active volcanoes, rugged coasts of black lava rock, green forests, and the deep blue Atlantic Ocean. Come to meditate on cliffs, join the yoga classes at your accommodation, or simply enjoy a relaxing massage. Embark on a journey away from everyday stress and towards inner peace and contentment. Let yourself be captured by the Azores' breathtaking natural paradise. These nine islands in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean are (fortunately) spared from mass tourism; they provide the perfect ambience and solitude to listen to your inner voice.

Your daily schedule and most activities can be decided spontaneously on site.

Let yourself be inspired to connect with nature. Take a meditative walk between hydrangeas and laurel trees and enjoy the views of crater edges. Take a deep breath as you visit the idyllic small towns of the islands. Let yourself be amazed when a whale emerges from the ocean, or when the milky way lights up in the sky at nighttime.

Experience the diversity of the Azores archipelago in an individual way during your journey, which will lead you the islands of São Miguel, São Jorge, and Pico. Each island is different from the others and has its own charm and peculiarities. Discover the islands at your own pace with your rental car, we will give you tips on how to organize your day.

Discover the diversity of Pico

Enjoy your days on the second largest island of the Azores archipelago. The island is also called "Ilha Negra", the black island, due to its many black lava rocks. Pico's natural landscape is very different from the other islands. With your rental car, you can flexibly organize your days according to your mood. In addition to the recommendations below, the island of Pico offers beautiful natural ocean swimming pools, which provide great pleasure in the summer months. Snorkeling is also very recommendable; right by the coast you can marvel at the diversity of marine life. Only sandy beaches are almost not existent on the island...

Recommendations for your stay on Pico:

Lajido: a walk through the former wine production village makes you realize that you are in the heart of the wine-growing area. The play of colors of the grey-black lava stone walls, the green vines and fig trees, as well as the deep blue of the Atlantic Ocean is very impressive. It's easy to understand why UNESCO has classified this area as a World Heritage Site; some elements of the 18th century, which was the peak of Pico's wine-growing era, are still visible. There is also an informative museum where everything revolves around wine - a wine tasting is a must!

Gruta das Torres: it's the longest lava tube in Portugal and one of the longest ones in Europe. The cave is located south of Madalena near Criação Velha. A guided tour through the cave gives interesting insights into Azorean volcanism and the emergence of the islands. Equipped with a helmet and flashlight, you can marvel at the beautiful shapes several lava flows have created.

And then there's Pico: how about climbing Pico, Portugal's highest mountain at 2,351 m?

The challenging hike starts at the foot of the mountain in the highlands of the island. After an arduous climb, which takes about 3.5 hours (about 1,100 meters in altitude), you will be rewarded with a magnificent view. With good visibility you can see all islands of the central group. The descent, after, is no less laborious. In good physical condition, the climb of the Pico Mountain is a highlight of any Azores holiday. A holiday in the Azores is almost unimaginable without a whale watching tour. Watch the giant marine mammals on a half-day tour. Whaling was a long-term success in the Azores until 1983, mainly by American whaling boats. The big marine mammals like to take a break here because of the abundance of fish. The most common is the sperm whale, up to 20 meters long, which lives year round in the waters around the Azores. Many different types of dolphins are at home here.

Your half-day tour starts and ends in Lajes.
